Editor's Note

Dear Readers,

Every organisation has a story. But what makes it worth telling are the people, beliefs and little moments that shape it along the way.

This month, I am reminded that our journey is about much more than the spaces we build. It is about the people who bring them to life, the courage to grow beyond our comfort zones, and the values that guide us every day.

One milestone that makes me especially proud is our Great Place To Work certification. Thank you to each one of you for participating in the survey and helping us celebrate the culture we are building together. This recognition is more than a feather in our cap; it reflects the strength of our teams and our collective commitment to creating a workplace where people can thrive. It also reinforces our belief in OQP - Only Quality People, because a strong organisation begins with the people who shape it.

From celebrating Ganesh festival together to understanding Pune's next chapter of growth, from the thinking behind our second brand campaign with Ranveer Singh to the people who make every customer interaction count, each story offers a glimpse into who we are becoming. The Shakti Edge finale was a reminder that leadership is not simply about the positions we hold, but the people we become along the way. Watching women embrace new challenges, discover their strengths and grow in confidence reinforced my belief that when we create space for people to learn, lead and support one another, we create a culture where everyone can thrive.

And that is what connects all these stories. Whether it is a project moving from an approval stamp to a living space, a team member solving a problem behind the scenes, or a colleague building trust with a customer, every contribution becomes part of something bigger.

At Jhamtani, The Name Is a Promise is a belief we strive to bring to life through our actions, our relationships and the impact we create every day.

As you turn these pages, I hope you discover the stories, people and moments that make our journey meaningful, and see how each of us contributes to building something bigger than ourselves.

Because the true measure of our growth lies not just in what we build, but in the trust we earn, the culture we nurture and the difference we make along the way.

Happy Reading!

Through His Eyes: Why Ranveer, Why Now

I still remember the buzz at our press conference in Pune last month. For sixteen years we have let our buildings do the talking. That day, we gave our promise a face.

When we announced Ranveer Singh as the face of Jhamtani, the surprise in the room was real, among the media, our partners and across the industry. Nobody expected a Pune developer to make this move. What followed in the weeks after surprised me even more.

One eye, one circle, one promise

The image people keep talking about is a simple one. Ranveer looks at you through a small circle made with his thumb and index finger. You can't see his face. Yet one look at that eye and you know exactly who it is.

I love this creative because it says something about us. Recognition doesn't need a full introduction when the character is strong enough. That is what we want the Jhamtani name to be: you see one detail, a finish, a handover, a site, and you know whose work it is. The circle also became a focus frame, an invitation to look closer. And a gesture anyone can copy is a gesture people share.

How the public reacted

The next morning, my phone would not stop ringing. Friends, relatives, professional peers and people I had not spoken to in years all asked the same thing: "Wow!! Ranveer!! And Why Ranveer?" Behind the question was curiosity, and curiosity is where a brand begins.

For years, many Pune families knew our buildings without knowing our name. They would say "that project in Baner" or "the one near Balewadi." Almost overnight, the name itself started to travel. I heard "Jhamtani" at weddings, events, in society WhatsApp groups and in casual conversations at our sites, said with a new familiarity.

The finger-circle pose took on a life of its own as people recreated and shared it. Our own homeowners told us they felt proud to belong to the brand. That pride meant more to me than any headline.

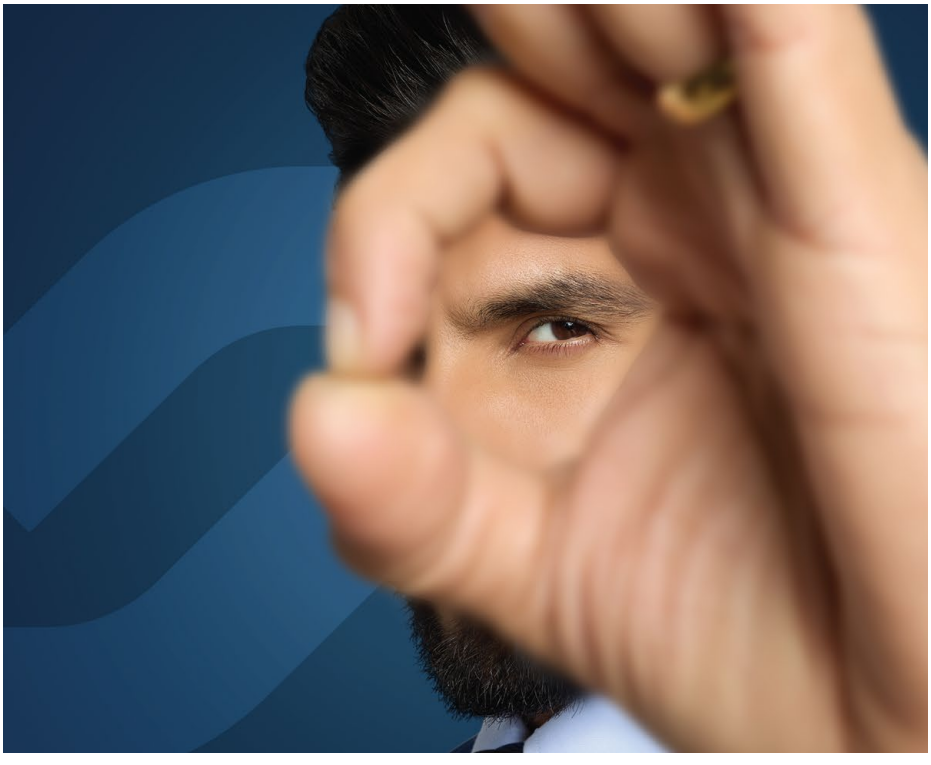

What the industry said

The industry's first reaction was disbelief. A regional developer signing one of India's biggest stars was not on anyone's radar. The announcement was picked up by national marketing and business media, places where Pune real estate rarely appears.

Peers and channel partners called, some to congratulate, some to ask how we pulled it off. Advertising professionals discussed the creative for its restraint: a face you cannot fully see, yet cannot miss. And yes, a few sceptics wondered whether a film star suits a developer known for quiet delivery. It's a fair question, and I welcome it.

Why it mattered

Homebuyers make the biggest purchase of their lives on trust, and trust starts with recall. With homes from mid-premium to ultra-luxury and commercial projects across Pune, we needed one face that ties the brand together. Ranveer's energy also matches our next phase: bigger launches, new markets, more ambition.

Jhamtani Earns Great Place to Work® Certification

A great workplace doesn't happen by chance. It is built through shared beliefs, everyday actions and a conscious effort to create an environment where people feel valued, supported and empowered to grow.

At Jhamtani, culture has always been viewed as more than a set of principles displayed on walls or outlined in policies. It is about the beliefs that guide everyday actions, the values that shape decisions and the experiences that bring people together. With this understanding, the organisation has consistently focused on creating a culture that employees can understand, experience and actively contribute to.

From Belief to Practice: The Thoughtful Tuesdays Journey

A key step in this journey has been the series of Thoughtful Tuesday sessions themed around "Jhamtani – The Name Is a Promise" and the organisation's belief system. These sessions were designed to bring the company's philosophy closer to its people, creating opportunities to reflect on what its values mean in everyday professional and personal experiences.

Through discussions, interactive activities and culture-focused sessions, employees explored how the organisation's core values—Customer Happiness, Better Than Yesterday, Think Long Term, and Positive Impact on Every Life Touched—translate into everyday behaviour, teamwork and decision-making.

The sessions encouraged employees to look beyond their individual roles and recognise how their actions contribute to a larger organisational purpose. By making culture a continuous conversation rather than a one-time exercise,

Thoughtful Tuesdays helped strengthen a shared understanding of what Jhamtani stands for and the responsibility each team member carries in bringing that belief system to life.

This deliberate focus on culture reflects the organisation's belief that a strong workplace is built through consistent actions, meaningful engagement and collective ownership.

A Milestone That Reflects the Collective Effort

The Great Place to Work certification marks an important milestone in this ongoing journey, reflecting employee perceptions of the organisation and its culture.

The recognition reinforces the importance of the efforts invested in strengthening employee engagement, building trust and creating an environment where people feel connected to the organisation's purpose. While the certification celebrates the progress made, it also serves as an opportunity to continue listening to employees and identifying ways to make the workplace experience better.

Empowering People Through Learning, Inclusion and Wellbeing

Jhamtani's commitment to culture extends beyond Thoughtful Tuesdays through initiatives designed to support employee wellbeing, professional development and leadership growth.

Fun Fit Fridays encourages employees to prioritise wellness and build stronger connections through engaging activities. The Shakti Edge mentorship programme focuses on nurturing women professionals through direct mentorship from senior management, cross-functional exposure and personal development, helping participants strengthen their confidence and leadership capabilities.

The organisation also promotes continuous learning through its Education Policy, supporting professional certifications and upskilling, alongside leadership-led culture workshops that encourage reflection, learning and alignment with organisational values.

With women comprising 25% of its workforce, Jhamtani continues to work towards an inclusive environment where individuals have opportunities to contribute, grow and make a meaningful impact.

The Name Is a Promise—To Our People Too

For Jhamtani, the Great Place to Work certification is not simply an accolade; it is a reflection of a culture that the organisation continues to nurture through intentional efforts and collective participation.

As the company continues to grow, its commitment remains centred on creating a workplace where people feel valued, trust one another, embrace continuous improvement and find purpose in their contributions.

Because at Jhamtani, "The Name Is a Promise" is not just a commitment to customers—it is a belief that begins with its people and grows through the culture they build together.

Pune at the Crossroads: What the GRI Meet Told Us About the City's Next Chapter

The recent GRI Meet at Kohinoor World Towers brought together leading voices from Pune's real estate and commercial ecosystem to discuss one key question: Where is Pune headed next?

The discussions explored entrepreneurship, infrastructure, GCCs, commercial real estate, residential demand, rental housing and the opportunities shaping Pune's next decade.

A City With Strong Momentum

Pune continues to strengthen its position as a leading business and real estate destination, supported by its diverse talent pool, engineering and manufacturing ecosystem, growing GCC presence, competitive real estate costs and improving infrastructure.

With companies increasingly evaluating Pune alongside Hyderabad and Chennai, the city has significant potential to attract further investment and talent.

GCCs and the Future of Commercial Real Estate

Global Capability Centres are emerging as a key driver of commercial demand. Their evolving requirements go beyond office space to include connectivity, sustainability, quality infrastructure and access to talent.

For developers, this signals a shift towards creating integrated ecosystems rather than simply building commercial spaces.

Infrastructure projects, including the Ring Road and metro expansion, will further influence the city's growth, making connectivity critical to unlocking Pune's next phase of development.

Evolving Residential Preferences

Changing lifestyles are reshaping housing demand. Younger professionals increasingly value flexibility and mobility, creating opportunities for rental housing, managed residences and co-living.

Meanwhile, RERA has strengthened transparency and accountability, reinforcing the importance of translating promises into delivery.

The Jhamtani Perspective

At Jhamtani, Crafting Skylines means more than building structures. It means understanding the city's evolving needs and creating spaces that support businesses, communities and future generations.

The GRI Meet reinforced a powerful takeaway: Pune's next chapter will be defined by how effectively real estate, infrastructure, businesses and communities grow together.

The opportunity is significant, and so is our responsibility to help shape a city ready for tomorrow.

Celebrating Growth, Courage, and Leadership: The Shakti Edge Journey

At JTribe, we believe that our greatest strength lies in our people—and true organizational growth happens when we create space for our team members to thrive, challenge themselves and realize their full potential.

On International Women's Day, the we were thrilled to announce Shakti Edge—a dedicated leadership and self-development mentorship program designed to empower the women across our organization to invest in their growth, broaden their perspectives, and build the confidence to lead.

This initiative was never meant to be just another training program; it was a call to action for those ready to reflect deeply, step out of their comfort zones, and turn ambition into tangible achievement.

Honoring Our First Cohort: Six Inspiring Women

From an inspiring pool of applicants across different departments, six remarkable colleagues stood out for their passion, commitment, and vision for self-improvement:
Anuja Sukre, Archana Shelake, Eshika Patil, Sanjot Chittampalle, Shruti Dangi & Vishakha Mali

Under the personal guidance of Mr. Anup Jhamtani (Managing Director) and Mrs. Meenakshi Jhamtani (Executive Director), these trailblazers embarked on a transformative mentorship journey split into two dedicated cohorts.

Key Achievements: Turning Reflection into Action

Over the past few months, we have watched with pride as our cohort embraced every challenge with enthusiasm and discipline. Here are some of the standout milestones they have achieved:

Defining Individual Action Plans: Each participant moved beyond theory by crafting clear, actionable goals and accountability metrics for both personal and professional development.

- Taking the Stage at Thoughtful Tuesday:

Pushing past self-doubt, members of the cohort stepped up to deliver impactful presentations to the wider JTribe family:

- Vishakha shared insights on "The Integral Role of Animals in Our Lives."

- Shruti challenged conventional thinking with "It's Okay to Not Have a Plan."

- Eshika explored focus and mindset in "The Law of Attraction."

- Sanjot led an engaging discussion on Communication: The Most Underrated Corporate Skill.

- Embracing Holistic Leadership & Well-Being: True leadership starts from within. To foster physical strength, balance, and mental clarity, the cohort joined Mrs. Meenakshi Jhamtani for an empowering Aerial Yoga and wellness session at The Breathing Room, Aundh.

Hear It From Our Cohort

Here is how this journey has impacted our participants in their own words:

- Through Shakti Edge, I learned to build daily routines around learning, health, teamwork, and communication. It has guided me onto the path of becoming a strong leader—teaching me to delegate trustfully, speak boldly, and keep improving every day." - Vishakha

- The program has increased my confidence in making firm personal and professional decisions, while helping me understand how fitness and health positively influence my mindset... It has empowered me to pursue leadership roles in real estate." - Archana

- The Shakti Edge sessions helped me become more self-aware, confident, resilient, and growth-oriented. I learned to communicate better, speak up for myself, take initiative, and confidently pursue opportunities." - Shruti

- I learned to be more open to new perspectives, take accountability, set clear goals, and stay true to my values and well-being... fitness and exercise build discipline, consistency, confidence, and a positive mindset." - Anuja

- For me, the real learning happened through the conversations, the questions, & the things I was made to rethink about myself... I'm taking away a different way of looking at myself, my choices, and the opportunities ahead." - Eshika

- The Shakti Edge programme has been a truly enriching experience, helping me grow both professionally and personally. It strengthened my leadership perspective, encouraged self-awareness, and motivated me to focus on overall well-being." - Sanjot

Looking Ahead: What's Next for Shakti Edge?

The journey doesn't end here! As our cohort prepares for the next phase, we have exciting milestones ahead:

1. Industry Mentorship: Participants will engage directly with prominent external women leaders, learning from real-world experiences and strategic perspectives.

2. The Final Milestone (September): Celebrating the completion of the mentorship, where two outstanding participants will be awarded sponsorship to pursue an advanced external leadership course.

Join us in celebrating Anuja, Archana, Eshika, Sanjot, Shruti, and Vishakha for their dedication, courage, and achievements so far. You are an inspiration to us all.

Ganpati at Jhamtani: More Than a Celebration

At Jhamtani, Ganpati is more than a festival; it is a reflection of our culture, values and the belief that we grow stronger when we come together.

The arrival of Bappa brings people across teams together, creating moments of shared joy, participation and connection. From the preparations and rituals to the little gestures that make the celebration special, every effort reflects the spirit of One Jhamtani Family — where collaboration extends beyond work and relationships grow beyond roles.

Rooted in our belief that culture is built through everyday actions, shared experiences and the values we practise, Ganpati becomes an opportunity to strengthen the bonds that bring us together. It reminds us that a strong organisation is not defined only by its milestones and achievements, but also by the people who contribute to its journey and the sense of belonging they share.

As we welcome Lord Ganesha, His values of wisdom, positivity, perseverance and new beginnings resonate with our own journey at Jhamtani. They inspire us to approach challenges with courage, work together with purpose and celebrate every milestone as a collective achievement.

Because at Jhamtani, culture isn't just about the traditions we uphold or the festivals we celebrate. It is about the people we bring together, the values we live by and the sense of family we continue to build — every day.

Bappa: Five Days of Love, Joy & Beautiful Memories

Our Ganesh Chaturthi journey began with the excitement of shopping for Bappa—choosing beautiful flowers, lights, garlands, diyas, decorations, and every little thing needed to make our home special.

Then came the most beautiful moment—Bappa arrived home! We welcomed Him with devotion, colourful decorations, glowing lights, prayers, and hearts full of happiness.

For five wonderful days, our home felt more alive. Every prayer, every smile, every family moment became a beautiful memory. And among all these memories, our little daughter created one of the sweetest ones.

Every time prasad was lovingly prepared for Bappa, our little girl would secretly steal a little, quietly run to a corner of the house, and enjoy it with so much love and innocence. Those tiny moments brought the biggest smiles and will forever remain among our most precious Bappa memories.

But on the 5th day, it was time for Visarjan. Saying goodbye to Bappa was deeply emotional. Our eyes were filled with tears, but our hearts were filled with gratitude for the love, peace, happiness, and blessings He brought into our home.

As we said, "Ganpati Bappa Morya, Pudhchya Varshi Lavkar Ya!", we knew Bappa was leaving only physically—His blessings, love, and beautiful memories would always remain in our hearts.

Thank you, Bappa, for turning our house into a home filled with faith, love, laughter, togetherness, and happiness.

The First Point of Trust and the Face of an Organization: Pre-Sales

A client's experience begins long before a sales meeting, site visit, or commercial discussion. It begins with the first conversation. Pre-Sales is not just a support function, it is one of the most important touchpoints between an organization and its potential clients.

Within just a few minutes, a client forms an impression based on the way they are greeted, the questions they are asked, the clarity of the information provided, and the overall professionalism of the conversation. A warm, confident, and informative interaction can create trust even before the actual sales process begins.

A Pre-Sales professional is not simply responsible for making calls. Their role involves understanding the client's requirements, asking the right questions, identifying genuine interest, providing relevant information, and ensuring that the client receives the right guidance.

In the real estate industry, this role becomes even more important, as clients may be making a significant financial decision. A client may have questions about location, budget, configuration, possession, amenities, or investment potential. The way these questions are handled during the first conversation can determine whether the client feels confident enough to take the next step.

A strong Pre-Sales professional asks the right questions and, more importantly, listens carefully to the answers. Understanding the client's actual requirement allows the organization to provide relevant solutions rather than simply presenting every available option.

Not every enquiry will immediately convert into a business opportunity. However, every interaction has the potential to influence the client's future relationship with the organization.

A professional interaction can build goodwill even when the timing is not right. Clients may return when their requirements change, or remember the experience when they are ready to make a decision.

Therefore, the objective of Pre-Sales should extend beyond immediate conversion. It should be about building trust, creating meaningful engagement, understanding customer needs, and contributing to a consistent customer experience.

From a leadership perspective, Pre-Sales plays a much larger role than simply being the first step in the sales funnel. It is the first opportunity for an organization to demonstrate its culture of customer centricity, professionalism, and accountability.

The journey from an enquiry to a successful relationship may involve many teams, but it often begins with one simple conversation—and that is why "the first conversation truly matters."

At Jhamtani, every conversation is an opportunity to build trust, customer-centric approach, represent our brand, and create a lasting impression.

Manager - Pre-Sales

The IT Behind a Seamless Workday

What happens behind the scenes to keep our people connected, productive and supported

Every working day begins with something most of us take for granted.

We switch on our laptop, connect to the internet, open our email, access files, join a meeting, print a document, or connect with colleagues at another location—and get to work.

When everything works smoothly, we rarely think about what makes it possible.

Behind that seamless experience is IT—the team working quietly in the background to keep people, systems, devices and information connected.

More Than Just "Fixing Computers"

IT support is often associated with fixing a laptop, resolving an internet problem, installing software, or helping when a printer stops working. While these are important responsibilities, modern IT operations go much further. Every day, IT works to ensure that employees have the right technology, access and support to perform their responsibilities effectively.

From laptops and desktops to printers, Wi-Fi, servers, business applications, email, cloud services, meeting-room technology and security systems—each component plays a role in keeping the organization moving.

What Happens Behind the Scenes?

A typical workday can involve numerous IT activities that employees may never see:

Keeping employees connected – Maintaining network and internet connectivity so teams can communicate and access required resources.

Managing IT assets – Ensuring laptops, desktops, printers and other devices are available, configured and properly assigned.

Supporting business applications – Helping employees access and use applications required for daily operations.

Managing email and cloud services – Supporting communication, file sharing and collaboration through platforms such as Google Workspace.

Maintaining meeting-room technology – Ensuring conference rooms, displays, projectors, cameras and audio systems are ready for meetings.

Protecting company information – Supporting antivirus, access controls, backups, account security and other measures designed to protect business data.

Supporting remote and site teams – Troubleshooting technology challenges even when employees are working away from the main office.

Planning for continuity – Monitoring infrastructure and preparing backups and recovery procedures so that business operations can continue when unexpected issues occur.

When IT Is Invisible, It Is Often Working Well

One of the interesting things about IT is that success is sometimes measured by what doesn't happen.

- No unexpected downtime.
- No disconnected meeting in the middle of an important discussion.
- No inaccessible file when it is urgently required.
- No security incident caused by an avoidable mistake.
- No technology issue stopping an employee from completing an important task.

A seamless workday is rarely accidental. It is the result of continuous monitoring, maintenance, troubleshooting, planning and coordination.

IT Security Is Everyone's Responsibility

Technology can only be effective when it is used responsibly.

Simple actions by every employee can make a significant difference:

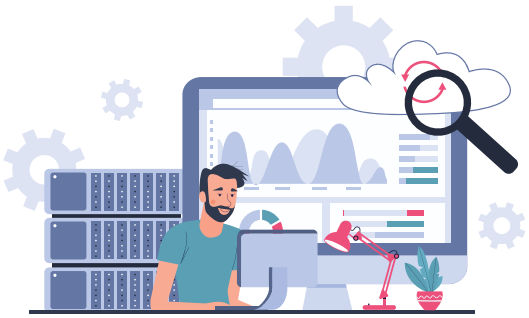

Use strong passwords. Protect your accounts. Enable two-step verification. Do not click suspicious links. Keep company devices secure. Avoid unauthorized software. Report unusual activity or technical problems promptly.

Cybersecurity is not only an IT responsibility—it is a shared responsibility across the organization.

From Reactive Support to Proactive IT

IT is also changing from simply responding to problems toward preventing problems before they affect employees.

Asset tracking, regular maintenance, software updates, backups, security controls, network monitoring and documentation all help identify risks early and improve reliability.

Mr. Kunal Dnyanmote
Assistant Manager - IT

Beyond the Approval Stamp: The People and Processes Behind Every Project

At Jhamtani, every milestone is built on compliance, coordination and trust.

In real estate, every approval marks an important milestone in a project's journey. But behind every No Objection Certificate (NOC), permission or commencement certificate lies a process that demands precision, persistence and collaboration.

Securing approvals goes far beyond submitting applications and awaiting sanctions. It requires a thorough understanding of regulations, meticulous documentation, adherence to statutory procedures and consistent coordination with consultants, architects, engineers, government authorities and internal teams.

As Dayal Jeswani, Liaisoning Director at Jhamtani, highlights, professional relationships built on credibility and trust play an important role in facilitating communication. However, it is compliance, preparation and perseverance that ultimately move a project forward.

Each approval represents hours of effort, countless follow-ups and the collective contribution of multiple stakeholders working towards a common objective. Ensuring that every requirement is met within the prescribed framework is essential not only to keep projects on track but also to establish processes that remain reliable and sustainable over time.

At Jhamtani, we believe that strong projects are built on more than concrete and steel. They are founded on ethical practices, regulatory compliance, accountability and teamwork. These principles shape how we approach every stage of development, reinforcing our commitment to responsible execution and long-term trust.

Because behind every "Approved" stamp is a team that made it possible—and a process that ensures it is done the right way.

At Jhamtani, every approval is more than a milestone. It is a promise of responsible development.

Thoughtful Tuesdays: When Beliefs Become Actions

Bringing "Jhamtani – The Name is a Promise" to life, one thought at a time.

At Jhamtani, culture is not just about what we believe in; it is about how we put those beliefs into practice every day.

Through Thoughtful Tuesdays, we create space for conversations that go beyond everyday work, encouraging our people to reflect, connect with our core values and explore how our beliefs influence the way we think, act and work together.

One of the key themes explored through these sessions is the manifestation of our belief system at work. The idea is simple yet powerful: the values we hold, the intentions we set and the actions we take shape not only our individual experiences but also the culture we collectively create.

Rooted in the philosophy of "Jhamtani – The Name is a Promise," these sessions encourage employees to look at how a promise translates into everyday behaviour—through ownership, integrity, consistency and the willingness to do better than yesterday.

The experience goes beyond listening to ideas. It invites participation, self-reflection and meaningful dialogue, helping employees connect personal growth with professional responsibilities. From the way we approach challenges to how we collaborate with colleagues and serve our customers, every interaction becomes an opportunity to put our beliefs into action.

These conversations reinforce an important thought: culture is built through small, consistent choices. It is reflected in the commitments we honour, the standards we uphold and the positive impact we create through our work.

At Jhamtani, Thoughtful Tuesdays are a reminder that a strong belief system is not merely something we speak about—it is something we practise, experience and strengthen together.

Because when our beliefs guide our actions, our values become our culture, and our culture becomes our promise.
